MISS JOO WRITES

Notes on Becoming

June

A gentle reflection journal for anyone learning to move slower and trust what's unfolding.

2026

MONTHLY LETTER

Dear one,

June felt like stripping things back to the truth. I noticed how often I was performing, softening, explaining, and carrying what should never have been mine alone.

This month asked difficult but honest questions. Am I being real, or am I still trying to remain acceptable? Am I fighting for something mutual, or forcing what only moves when I carry it? Am I peaceful, or simply too tired to speak again?

I learned that honesty can feel sharp at first. An honest no. An unanswered message left alone. A boundary that no longer comes with a long apology. But there is peace in the unadorned. There is relief in no longer auditioning for your own life.

This journal is for the woman who is tired of diluting herself. You are allowed to stop performing. You are allowed to believe what your exhaustion is telling you. You are allowed to release what keeps asking you to abandon yourself.

Let June be the month you choose what is honest over what only looks acceptable.

With love,

Miss Joo

THIS MONTH'S REFLECTIONS

Blog Recap & Highlights

1. I'm learning to exist without performing - June 2
2. The black coffee rule - June 9
3. There is a difference between fighting for love and forcing it - June 12
4. 5 Signs You're Emotionally Tired From Trying Too Hard - June 16
5. What Peace Taught Me About Letting Go - June 24

QUOTES TO SIT WITH

> I'd rather be quietly real than loudly curated.
>
> There is so much peace in the unadorned.
>
> If you are the only one fighting for it, maybe you are not fighting for love anymore. Maybe you are forcing it.
>
> You are not asking for too much. You are just tired of asking the wrong person.
>
> Sometimes letting go is not losing someone. Sometimes it is finally getting yourself back.

GUIDED REFLECTIONS

Reflections for This Month

REFLECTION 1

Where I still perform

Where do you edit, soften, or curate yourself so other people will find you easier to accept? What would being quietly real look like there?

REFLECTION 2

The black coffee rule

What are you sweetening, diluting, or dressing up because the honest version feels too sharp? Write the truth underneath it.

REFLECTION 3

Fighting or forcing?

Think of one relationship or situation that has been taking your energy. Is the effort mutual, or does it only move when you carry it? What evidence do you have?

REFLECTION 4

What exhaustion is saying

What have you explained, forgiven, or carried too many times? If your tiredness could speak honestly, what would it ask you to stop doing?

REFLECTION 5

Fill in the blanks

I am tired of explaining _____ .

An honest no I need to say is _____ .

I know I am forcing it when _____ .

Letting go would make room for _____ .

CREATIVE ACTIVITY

Strip It Back

Like the black coffee rule, remove the additions. On the left, name what you have been performing, sweetening, or forcing. On the right, write the honest truth underneath it.

WHAT I HAVE BEEN PERFORMING	WHAT IS TRUE UNDERNEATH

ONE HONEST CHOICE I AM READY TO MAKE:

What I'm Grateful For

Three moments when I felt most like myself.

1

2

3

A truth about myself I want to honor:

My intention for July:

"Sometimes letting go is not losing someone.
Sometimes it is finally getting yourself back."

NOTES ON BECOMING, JUNE

Miss Joo Writes

missjoowrites.com · @missjooo98