MISS JOO WRITES

Notes on Becoming

September

A gentle reflection journal for a rhythm that fits the life you actually have.

2026

Dear one,

September has always felt like a second beginning to me.

This year, my birthday gave that feeling a little more weight. I did not want to reinvent myself or arrive at a new age with another list of demands. I wanted to look honestly at what I was carrying and ask whether I had ever chosen it.

Some of the habits that helped me survive still protect me. Others have become armor I wear even when I am safe. I can respect the version of me who built them without asking her to keep carrying everything alone.

I am also paying attention to the shape of my days. Being busy is not the same as building something meaningful, and a routine should support the life I have rather than punish me for not living an imagined one.

This journal is a small invitation to sort what comes with me, choose what matters now, and begin again through ordinary decisions. I do not need a perfect plan. I need a rhythm I can return to.

With love,

Miss Joo

THIS MONTH'S REFLECTIONS

Blog Recap & Highlights

1. September Feels Like a Second New Year - September 1
2. The Armor I Built, and What I'm Ready to Set Down - September 5
3. The Difference Between Being Busy and Building Something - September 12
4. My Standards Are Not Too High. They Are Finally Mine. - September 19
5. What I Am Choosing Now - September 26

QUOTES TO SIT WITH

> It feels like the year is starting again.
>
> What I am setting down is the need to be strong all the time.
>
> Busy is motion. Building is direction.
>
> I won't abandon myself to make a room more comfortable.
>
> A choice gets made again and again, especially on the days it's hard.

GUIDED REFLECTIONS

Reflections for This Month

REFLECTION 1

What am I carrying forward?

Which habits, fears, or expectations have followed me into each new season without being reconsidered? Which still serve the life I want?

REFLECTION 2

The armor I built

Which habits helped me survive, and where do I still wear that armor when I could let someone in?

REFLECTION 3

Busy or building?

What am I building for my own future, even if I can give it only one small hour this week?

REFLECTION 4

Standards that are mine

Which standards reflect my values now, and which did I accept because I was afraid to ask for more?

REFLECTION 5

Fill in the blanks

I want to make more room for... .

One thing I am building for my future is... .

A standard I will no longer lower is... .

This year, I am choosing... .

CREATIVE ACTIVITY

A Rhythm That Fits My Life

Look at your real life, not an ideal version of it. Choose what to keep, what to adjust, and what to release so your routines can support your values without pushing you past your limits.

WHAT ALREADY SUPPORTS ME

WHAT I WANT TO ADJUST

ONE SMALL RHYTHM I WANT TO PRACTICE

What I'm Grateful For

Three ordinary moments that made life feel steadier.

1

2

3

A rhythm that helped me feel like myself:

My intention for October:

I do not need to reinvent my life.
I need to choose, with care, what I carry into it.

NOTES ON BECOMING, SEPTEMBER

Miss Joo Writes

missjoowrites.com · @missjooo98